Why you should attend

This 3 hour seminar (1 hour of ethics) capitalizes on the notion that success in trial work, appellate advocacy or other forms of dispute resolution is often a function of how efficiently and effectively the lawyer acts at the beginning of each phase or effort in the life of a case. We will focus on breaking the litigation or dispute resolution process into critical component parts and then explore the options to consider for initial steps, as well as the first steps that can make each phase operate as efficiently as possible. By putting such planning and early steps strategies into play, counsel will be able to avoid the "wheel-spinning" and wasted efforts chasing dead-end ideas that undermine our quest for efficient and precise practice
